

The Kind Elephant

Once upon a time, in a dense green forest, there lived a large elephant named Ella. She was the biggest animal in the forest, but she was also the kindest.

Ella spent her days helping other animals. She used her strong trunk to lift fallen branches, carry water during dry days, and rescue small animals when they were in trouble. Because of her helpful nature, all the animals loved and respected her.

One summer, the forest faced a terrible drought. The rivers dried up, and the animals struggled to find water. The deer, rabbits, monkeys, and birds became worried about their survival.

Ella remembered a hidden pond deep inside the forest that she had seen years ago. She decided to lead the animals there. The journey was long and difficult. Many animals became tired, but Ella encouraged them to keep moving.

After hours of walking, they finally reached the hidden pond. The pond was full of fresh, clean water. The animals were overjoyed. They drank water, bathed, and felt relieved.

The animals thanked Ella for saving them. However, Ella humbly replied, "We survived because we worked together. No one succeeds alone."

From that day on, the animals became even closer. They learned the importance of friendship, teamwork, and helping one another.

Ella continued to live happily in the forest, always ready to help anyone in need. Her kindness inspired every animal, and her story was passed down for generations.

Moral: Kindness and teamwork can overcome even the greatest challenges.
